Saigon Battalion Fights Foe Infiltrating Toward Capital

SAIGON, Dec. 11 (AP).—Fresh North Vietnamese troops were reported today to be infiltrating toward Saigon from the Parrot's Beak region of neighboring Cambodia. They ran into a battalion of South Vietnamese militia and touched off one of the sharpest ground battles in weeks.

According to initial field reports, 27 North Vietnamese soldiers were killed in the fighting, nine miles south of the provincial capital of Tay Ninh.

The United States put 12 B-52 strikes into an arc-shaped area between 23 and 49 miles northeast and northwest of Saigon, the U.S. command reported, apparently in response to the Communist thrust.

Heaviest Attacks Since October
More of the strikes were in Binh Duong Province, south and east of Tay Ninh, and they were the heaviest in that province since Oct. 6.

Mao-Tse-tung

Mao's Triumph

In 1957 Mao wrote: "The actual situation when the United States controls the majority in the UN is only provisional and eventually will change."

Mao has been right! The United States has lost the majority and its influence is decreasing. The Chinese communist party declares now that Nixon comes to Peking to present America's capitulation.

Meantime, horrors transpire from Chinese communist prisons. Maoists have gouged eyes with sulphuric acid and have cut tongues and hands of their helpless victims. In Tienhsin, China, Catholic priests have been even buried alive. At least 100,000 Christians are imprisoned today in China.

Rev. Richard Wurmbrand, who spent himself 14 years in communist prisons, describes in his books the courageous acts of faith of our suffering Christian brethren in communist countries.

The Parrot's Beak, which starts like a dagger toward Saigon, is a traditional jumping-off point for North Vietnamese units attempting to infiltrate the capital's outer defenses.

U.S. military sources insist, however, that at this stage there is no major threat to Saigon. "The B-52s have been hitting staging areas, and there is nothing significant in the increased number of strikes," said a U.S. source.

Typhoon Rips Coast

Typhoon Teresa meanwhile ripped through a U.S. Army airbase on the central coast of South Vietnam, damaging three helicopters and a propeller-driven Skyrider and temporarily bringing military operations in the area to a halt.

The announcement was the latest of a stream of changes put through by the new Labor Prime Minister, Gough Whitlam. In the week since he was sworn in Mr. Whitlam has put a new face on Australian foreign policy.

Because his administration has to be selected by the full Labor parliamentary membership and because some seats from the Dec. 2 general elections are still in doubt, Mr. Whitlam has taken on temporary responsibility for 12 ministries and allocated 14 others to Mr. Barnard. The two have been pushing through reforms that are agreed Labor party policy and that do not require parliamentary approval.

Several refugee camps were devastated by the storm, and several thousand refugees were left without shelter, Vietnamese officials reported. More than 1,000 homes were heavily damaged, and the village of Cat Trang was virtually destroyed. Crop damage was reported extensive.

Casualties among the civilian population have not yet been reported to Saigon authorities.

U.S. troop strength in Vietnam dipped by 300 last week to 25,200 men, the U.S. command announced today. This was a drop of 300 from the previous week.

The total includes 14,400 Army, 8,000 Air Force and 1,800 Navy personnel, 1,200 Marines and 100 Coast Guard men.

About 100,000 more U.S. servicemen are supporting the war from bases in Guam and Thailand and from ships of the Seventh Fleet.

Fighting in Laos

VIENTIANE, Laos, Dec. 11 (AP).—The American-financed "secret army" of Meo Gen Vang Pao has lost three recent defense positions just north of Gen. Pao's headquarters at Long Cheng, 80 miles northeast of Vientiane.

A U.S. military source said it had not been determined how far Gen. Pao's soldiers would be pushed by the Communist attack, which began at 5:30 a.m. Friday with a heavy artillery and mortar barrage on the positions before a ground attack was launched.

Final casualty figures have not been released, but they are known to be high. One unit that was overrun has a number of soldiers still listed as missing.

Meanwhile Lao irregular forces were still trying to regain the provincial capital of Saravane, 280 miles southeast of Vientiane.

Chou Says World Ignores Plight of Saigon Prisoners

PEKING, Dec. 11 (Reuters).—Premier Chou En-lai tonight complained about the "hue and cry" over a few hundred American prisoners of war in North Vietnam while there was little protest over tens of thousands of Vietnamese held by the Saigon government.

"Is that fair?" Mr. Chou asked correspondents attending a reception given here by African ambassadors in honor of visiting Guinean Prime Minister Lansana Beavogui.

Mr. Chou was asked whether he thought there might be good news from the Vietnamese press talks in Paris within two or three days.

He replied, "Perhaps, but one must be prudent."

He also said that in South Vietnam there were many thousands of prisoners but that attention was focused on a few hundred other prisoners in North Vietnam.

Mr. Chou said that there had been no news about those held in the South.

Australia Out Of Vietnam In 3 Weeks

Last Army Advisers To Be Withdrawn

By Colin Chapman

SYDNEY, Dec. 11 (WP).—Australia's involvement in the Vietnam war will end by New Year's Day, Defense Minister Lance Barnard said today.

He announced that army advisers left behind to train South Vietnamese and Cambodian troops following the main Australian pullout last March "will all be back inside three weeks."

The announcement was the latest of a stream of changes put through by the new Labor Prime Minister, Gough Whitlam. In the week since he was sworn in Mr. Whitlam has put a new face on Australian foreign policy.

VIENTIANE, Laos, Dec. 11 (AP).—The American-financed "secret army" of Meo Gen Vang Pao has lost three recent defense positions just north of Gen. Pao's headquarters at Long Cheng, 80 miles northeast of Vientiane.

A U.S. military source said it had not been determined how far Gen. Pao's soldiers would be pushed by the Communist attack, which began at 5:30 a.m. Friday with a heavy artillery and mortar barrage on the positions before a ground attack was launched.

Final casualty figures have not been released, but they are known to be high. One unit that was overrun has a number of soldiers still listed as missing.

Meanwhile Lao irregular forces were still trying to regain the provincial capital of Saravane, 280 miles southeast of Vientiane.

Chou Says World Ignores Plight of Saigon Prisoners

PEKING, Dec. 11 (Reuters).—Premier Chou En-lai tonight complained about the "hue and cry" over a few hundred American prisoners of war in North Vietnam while there was little protest over tens of thousands of Vietnamese held by the Saigon government.

"Is that fair?" Mr. Chou asked correspondents attending a reception given here by African ambassadors in honor of visiting Guinean Prime Minister Lansana Beavogui.

Mr. Chou was asked whether he thought there might be good news from the Vietnamese press talks in Paris within two or three days.

He replied, "Perhaps, but one must be prudent."

He also said that in South Vietnam there were many thousands of prisoners but that attention was focused on a few hundred other prisoners in North Vietnam.

Mr. Chou said that there had been no news about those held in the South.

Supreme Court Agrees to Rule U.S. Employees in Politics

INGTON, Dec. 11 (AP).—Supreme Court agreed to rule on whether federal employees may engage in partisan politics.

That will be decided in a case from the District of Columbia, involving the 1968 law affecting 5.5 million federal and state workers. The law, Oklahoma, involves a ban on political activities.

In the Oklahoma case, a three-judge panel came to an opposite conclusion: that the ban on partisan politics is fully constitutional.

First Amendment

In last July's 2-1 ruling on the Hatch Act, a district court in Washington said the law was overly broad and violated workers' First Amendment rights.

The two-judge majority held that a 1947 decision upholding the law was "outmoded by passage of time" and by subsequent rulings regarding First Amendment rights.

In appealing, the government called the law a "cornerstone of the merit civil service system."

Solicitor General Erwin N. Griswold and other Justice Department lawyers said it would be impractical to require Congress to write a new law that specifically defined every form of objectionable political action.

Besides, they said, the Civil Service Commission has followed through with "clear and reasonable regulations."

The suit was brought by the National Association of Letter Carriers, six individual federal employees and six Washington-area Democratic and Republican political committees.

An LSD Link Is Seen Possible In High Rate of Birth Defects

By Victor Cohn

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11 (WP).—A life style that included LSD, very probably impure LSD, as well as other drugs, diseases and bad nutrition, led to an abnormally high number of birth defects in the babies of 140 young women in the Washington area.

The LSD alone cannot be blamed because there were too many other factors to say whether or not it was partly or wholly responsible, according to doctors who examined the 140 women at George Washington University Medical Center.

Whether LSD can cause birth defects is still a matter of medical debate.

"What we can say," said Dr. Cheston M. Berlin, "is that these mothers were a very, very high risk group, that there was something about them that made them different."

"The message is probably that if you're pregnant, or thinking of becoming pregnant, 'don't take any drug,'" he said.

Of 148 pregnancies in these 140 women—in all cases, either the prospective mother or father reported taking LSD before or after conception—there were the following abnormalities:

Eight of 83 newborns (the number of pregnancies actually resulting in births) had "major congenital defects," 10 to 20 times the number normally expected. These included what Dr. Cecil B. Jacobson and Dr. Berlin say they have not found reported anywhere in medical literature: a baby without feet.

Twelve mothers suffered spontaneous abortions. Fetuses expelled in this way commonly possess defects.

Fifty-three of the women had therapeutic abortions. Four of 14 embryos that were intact enough for analysis showed "gross anomalies."

Six women in the group had more than one baby during the main period of observation. All of these women had a normal baby the first time. But four of eight later pregnancies ended in abnormal fetuses or (in one case) an abnormal newborn.

The observation period was 1968 to 1970, and the full report, including recent follow-up, is published in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

LSD was in wide use in the "drug culture" in 1968. It is still taken today, though the use of amphetamines (also known as "speed") far outstrips it.

Dr. Maimon Cohen of the State University of New York at Buffalo first reported in 1967 that LSD broke chromosomes (carriers of genetic material inside cells) in the test tube. But studies of the drug's effects on animal babies were in conflict. Human studies have conflicted as well.

Two Californians looked at 120 live offspring of 247 parents who had taken LSD. They found a moderately high incidence of abortions, but concluded: "There is no evidence of a relation between parental LSD exposure and major congenital defects in their offspring." A new book, "Licit and Illicit Drugs," by Edward M. Brecher and the editors of Consumers Union, an independent product research organization, calls this study "by far the best

Hungarian, Two Russians Tie in Chess

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, Dec. 11 (UPI).—Two Russians and a Hungarian were tied for first place after the final round of the San Antonio international chess tournament yesterday.

Ivan Portisch of Hungary and Russians Anatoly Karpov and Tigran Petrosian each finished with 10 1/2 points. They will share the $7,000 first prize.

Fourth place in the 15-round tournament will not be decided until tonight, because some of the games played during the weekend were adjourned. But there is no way any player in tonight's games could catch the leaders.

Karpov, 20, and Petrosian played their opponents to draw apparently preplanned, and moved in a first-place tie. They then watched the match between Portisch and Bent Larsen, of Denmark, along with 400 other spectators, including world champion Bobby Fischer.

Fischer did not compete in the San Antonio games, but came by to observe the final round.

He criticized the Russians for what he said was their practice of agreeing to a draw when they play each other during a round-robin tournament, thus assuring both players half a point.

"I think it's pretty chicken," Fischer said. "But it's to be expected."

In three meetings between Russians in the San Antonio games, draws were reached every time.

Portisch played white brilliancy in his must game against Larsen, forcing the Danish grand master to resign on the 34th move.

"It was a tough tournament and I'm glad I could make it in the end," said Portisch, seventh-time Hungarian champion. "Now I plan to give some exhibitions in the United States, starting in New Orleans, and go back to Budapest and relax."

Fischer watched the Portisch-Larsen match through binoculars from the back of the room, into graph-seekers swarmed around him during his four-hour stay. Fischer obliged and also consented to photographs. It was still the old Fischer, though. He arrived a quarter of an hour late, holding up the start of the match.

Karpov and Henrique Mecking of Brazil, reached their draw in only nine moves, while Petrosian and Duncan Suttles, of Canada, reached a draw in 11 moves.

Paul Keres, the third Russian in the tournament, reached a draw with Julio Kaplan of Puerto Rico. Last night, while Don Byrne, of the United States, and Tibor Horvath of Czecho-Slovakia, also agreed to a draw.

First Refugees in 7 Months

Cuba-U.S. 'Freedom Flights' Resume

MIAMI, Dec. 11 (UPI).—The "freedom flights" carrying Cuban refugees to the United States to live in exile resumed today with a plane load of mostly elderly persons.

The first flight from Cuba in seven months, an Eastern Airlines propeller Electra chartered by the U.S. government, landed at 10:25 a.m. carrying 88 passengers.

The arrival was minus the jubilant scenes of past flights, when refugees kissed the ground at the foot of the stairs from the plane.

The refugees filed off quietly, but were plainly happy.

The first couple off the plane was Octavio Galindo, 68, and his wife, Victoria, 65. They smiled at the 50 or so newcomers and government agency officials who met the plane, and Mr. Galindo grinned and applauded the people who were applauding the de-barking refugees.

Mr. Galindo said he and his wife signed up to leave Cuba last February. It previously had been reported by the Cuban government that the departure lists had been closed since 1966.

Meanwhile, three bomb blasts within 35 minutes of each other wrecked or heavily damaged Cuban-owned businesses here and in New York City.

No injuries were reported.

The explosions damaged a Queens travel agency and destroyed the Manhattan offices of the Va-Cuba freight-forwarding firm in New York, police said.

Miners' Union Completes Ballot; Supervision Strict

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Dec. 11 (UPI).—The ballots from the United Mine Workers election, conducted under strict government supervision, have been shipped for counting at one location.

Labor Department officials who watched over the court-ordered elections locked sealed ballot boxes into bus luggage compartments yesterday and shipped them to Silver Spring, Md., where they will be counted by the department's Office for Labor Administration.

The results of the election will not be available until around Dec. 20.

The election, pitting reform candidate Arnold Miller against incumbent UMW president W.A. "Tony" Boyle, was ordered by a federal judge earlier this year.

The judge ruled that the union's 1968 election, in which Mr. Boyle defeated Joseph Vaborski, contained widespread irregularities. Mr. Vaborski was found murdered less than a month after the election.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11 (UPI).—Tricia and Edward Cox flew to London today on a private vacation with stops planned in several European capitals, including Moscow.

The Coxes, daughter and son-in-law of President Nixon, were traveling on a commercial airline, paying their own expenses, according to a White House spokesman.

Mark Van Doren, 78, Poet Won Pulitzer Prize in 1940

TORRINGTON, Conn., Dec. 11 (AP).—Mark Van Doren, 78, Pulitzer Prize-winning poet, died here last night.

The author of "Collected Poems," which won the literary prize in 1940, was admitted to Charlotte Hungerford Hospital Thursday for an undisclosed ailment.

He wrote more than 50 books, including "Don Quixote's Profession," several volumes of poems, an autobiography and a play, "The Last Days of Lincoln."

Mr. Van Doren, son of an Illinois country doctor, taught English at Columbia University for 38 years before his retirement in 1959.

Among Mr. Van Doren's students were Thomas Merton, Clifton Fadiman, Mortimer Adler, Jacques Barzun, Lionel Twining and Henry Robinson.

Mr. Van Doren published his first book, "Henry David Thoreau: A Critical Study," in 1916 while working for his doctor's degree at Columbia.

Mr. Van Doren was literary editor of the Nation from 1924 to 1928, and its motion picture critic from 1933 to 1938. He was a member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters and its president in 1957.

His oldest brother the late Carl Van Doren, won the Pulitzer Prize one year before he died with a biography of Benjamin Franklin.

Mr. Van Doren's second wife, Dorothy, was herself a novelist and two daughters also write and illustrate books.

"We're a family of words," Mr. Van Doren once remarked. "We love words and we live by them."

Two sons followed in Mr. Van Doren's footsteps as a teacher. Charles Van Doren became an English teacher at Columbia, and John taught it at Brandeis University.

Dr. Henri-Marie Coanda

NEW YORK, Dec. 11 (NYT).—Dr. Henri-Marie Coanda, 86, who invented and flew a rudimentary jet airplane in 1910, more than 30 years before jet aircraft became a practical reality late in World War II, died Nov. 25, in Bucharest.

Dr. Coanda, who had flown his primitive jet-propelled aircraft a few feet before it crashed, gave up the research after his family refused to support the project financially any longer and the government of France said the concept was impractical.

He went on to a career that mixed a number of failures in business enterprises with many distinguished contributions to science. His interests included pioneer efforts in the 1920s to desalinate sea water and build prefabricated houses, but his most important contributions were in aerodynamics.

Dr. Coanda was most noted for discovery of what became known as the "Coanda Effect." Fascinated by the behavior of air streams during his early work with jet engines, he discovered that air or other fluids, when directed over a curved surface, tend to cling to the surface and follow its contour.

Coanda's Theory

Dr. Coanda theorized that if air was blasted at high speed over a rounded body, some of the air in the atmosphere could be induced to hug the edge of the body. This would create a vacuum above the rounded body—and normal atmospheric pressure beneath it would lift it upward.

Proving his theory in 1933, Dr. Coanda flew a model of what he later called history's first "flying saucer"—a saucer-shaped craft that flew upward just as he had predicted.

After World War II, researchers in the United States, Canada and other countries sought to develop "flying saucers," and he was a consultant to some of the work.

Dr. Coanda was born June 7, 1888, in Bucharest of aristocratic parents, whose ancestors had emigrated from France. He moved to France with his family as a child and studied sculpture under Auguste Rodin. But he preferred technology to art. He lived most of his life in Paris, but returned a few years ago to his native Bucharest.

Kenney Dorham

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11 (WP).—Trumpeter-composer Kenney Dorham, 48, an early exponent of modern jazz in the mid-1940s, died Tuesday at his home in New York City of a kidney ailment.

Because of chronic kidney problems and hypertension, Mr. Dorham had been relatively inactive in recent years. He used a kidney machine several times a week. He had been performing one night a week at a night-club in Harlem but had to sit while playing.

Mr. Dorham, whose trumpet playing was characterized by a darting, lyrical melodic style and soft, warm tone, enjoyed his most glorious period in the mid-1950s as a member of drummer Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers. In the late 1950s, he led his own groups.

Mr. Dorham performed with Dizzy Gillespie, Billy Eckstine, Lionel Hampton, Charlie Parker and Max Roach.

Roger Brunschwig

NEW YORK, Dec. 11 (Reuters).—Col. Roger Brunschwig, 81, a French hero of the two world wars, died here Thursday, it was reported today.

The colonel, born on July 14, 1891 at Argenteuil, died in New York Hospital. He had been living in New York, where he headed a family fabric company.

Col. Brunschwig led the famous French infantry force, the Diablos Bleus (Blue Devils), in World War I and landed in Normandy at the head of 200 French liaison officers in the 1944 Allied invasion in World War II.

The colonel had received some of France's highest decorations. His face was severely mutilated from the serious wounds he received in World War I. He underwent 27 operations.

Karl A. Bickel

SARASOTA, Fla., Dec. 11 (UPI).—Karl A. Bickel, 96, president of United Press for 12 years, died today at Sarasota Memorial Hospital after a long illness.

Mr. Bickel resigned the UP presidency in 1935 at the age of 53. He resided in Florida for the rest of his life, where he was active in community affairs until recent years.

Mr. Bickel joined United Press in San Francisco in 1907. For five years, he was editor of the Grand Junction (Col.) Daily News, then rejoined UP.

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 11 (AP).—James H. Nicholson, 56, producer of "I Was a Werewolf" and other films, died yesterday. Some other films he produced were "How to Stuff a Wild Bikini," "Drag Strip Girl" and "Beach Blanket Bingo."

The sources said there was no conflict between the demobilization and the increased military preparedness because Egypt has a surplus of manpower for conscription purposes.

The sources said the demobilization appeared to be in response to public calls for shorter conscription periods to avoid causing hardship to families of conscripts and to prevent manpower shortages in civilian jobs.

Progress on Hijacking With Cuba

Secretary Rogers reports that negotiations through the Swiss have produced the "foundation of an agreement" on a hijacking treaty with Cuba. This is encouraging news. The hijacking of American planes to Cuba has rightly terrified air travelers; the assurance of harsh punishment would surely help limit that threat. On its part, Havana sees Cubans' hijacking of Cuban ships to the United States, or their departure by other "illegal means," as a threat to the integrity of the Castro government; to that they correctly link the pinprick raids of American-based Cuban exiles which, it is reported, the United States has now said it will work harder to stop.

Fidel Castro's decision to resume the airlift that, before its suspension last year, had brought 250,000 Cubans to Miami can perhaps be read as his way to offer a certain legal alternative to those who may have considered violent hijacking or nonviolent escape as the only ways to leave Cuba. The airlift cannot be a substitute for the orderly legal emigration that presumably would go on if Cuban-American political relations were normalized. Even then there might be a problem: More Cubans might wish to emigrate than the United States wished to accept. But Mr. Castro could hardly consider that as anything but a problem for his own solving. It is a fact of life with which he (as well as Washington) must cope, that the United States is only a short 90 miles away. In any event, normal political ties would certainly provide a viable alternative to hijacking for any Americans, except psychopaths, who might wish to go to Cuba.

Justified Mass Murder?

As Henry Kissinger labors mightily in Paris to bring home the peace for which so many Americans have yearned so long, the American military system seemed determined to bring forth just one last obscenity before the firing ceased. And so, an Army officer did it the other day in a military courtroom in Falls Church, Capt. J. Houston Gordon, arguing the appeal of Lt. William Calley's conviction of the murder of civilians at My Lai, told the court that because the fight in Vietnam is a guerrilla war, the villagers weren't qualified for the protection accorded to prisoners of war in conventional wars.

Did you get that? We didn't get it the first time around either, so we'll run over it just one more time. The villagers, according to the argument, were not readily identifiable as non-combatants and thus, they bore the burden of proof of demonstrating their non-combatant status. If they don't meet that burden, then what? Well, Capt. Gordon made that pretty clear when one of the judges asked whether that theory would not make the villagers "fair game" for the American

Exemplary Peacemakers

The army chiefs of India and Pakistan have eliminated a small but critical obstacle to peace on the subcontinent with their agreement on the last disputed segment of a Kashmir cease-fire line.

Establishment of the Kashmir "line of control" clears the way for implementation of last July's Simla accord between Prime Minister Indira Gandhi of India and President Zulfikar Ali Bhutto of Pakistan. This would mean the return of 5,000 square miles of Indian-occupied territory to Pakistan, a boon that should encourage Mr. Bhutto to take the next important step—recognition of Bangladesh.

A Scrooge in Rhodesia?

If Ian Smith can pass laws with a discriminatory flavor and still show convincingly that he has wrought a change of heart among Africans, he is indeed a remarkable man. But there are signs that he is losing his sureness of touch at times and is in danger of becoming a scrooge in constitutional issues. The Rhodesian prime minister does not exactly present to his people the benevolent mien of a national leader. Meanwhile, finance still pinches Rhodesia hard. Sympathetic governments in the antipodes have been overthrown. The United Nations assembly becomes more vindictive. Not a good time to risk losing good will.

NATO in 1973

In the year ahead it will be up to the free part of Europe to help itself. The West European NATO partners taken together have more men and a greater industrial potential than Brezhnev's vast totalitarian empire. They cannot expect the Americans to continue carrying an unreasonable excessive portion of the burden of their defense. U.S. Secretary of State Rogers declared in Brussels that, in the period following the end of the Vietnam war, Europe will be the focal point of American foreign policy. But this cannot mean a soft featherbed on which an expanded Common Market can rest and grow. For the coming year of super-negotiations—a year that will also bring expiration of the McMahon Act which has thus far blocked closer nuclear cooperation between France and Great Britain—NATO's primary function will be to actively remind Europe that prosperity without defense is illusory and détenté without adequate fundamental security would be catastrophic self-deception.

Kissinger Then and Now

By Anthony Lewis

LONDON—At what we hope is the brink of success for Henry Kissinger, in his long search for peace in Vietnam, it is fascinating to look back at the paper in which he roughed out his approach to the negotiations. That was his article of January, 1968, in Foreign Affairs.

Unlike many American officials before and since, Kissinger did not deceive himself about a military victory around the corner. He saw that the U.S. government had to be limited.

He was realistic about the strengths and weaknesses of the two sides, perceiving with particular foresight that the international situation was "precarious" for Hanoi.

He was skeptical of the two most widely discussed possible negotiating objectives, a condition government or a cease-fire. The latter, he warned, would make South Vietnam "a crazy quilt, with enclaves of conflicting loyalties all over the country." A cease-fire would also raise severe problems of verification, enforcement and control of guerrilla activity.

Staged Withdrawal

Kissinger concluded that the United States should seek not a negotiated political solution but a limited military one—a "staged withdrawal" by American and North Vietnamese forces, leaving the conflicting parties in South Vietnam to work out the political future. That would meet the crucial objective of "ending the war honorably."

Four years later, it appears that the terms of any agreement finally made with Le Duc Tho would meet Kissinger's 1968 ideas only in part.

There has been no mutual withdrawal of forces, and there is little likelihood of a formal promise by Hanoi to pull its troops out. The United States has accepted the idea of a cease-fire, necessarily.

On the other hand, Kissinger did succeed in separating the two tracks, military and political. The peace terms tentatively agreed in October would allow the United States to pull all its forces out of South Vietnam with the political future there still open—and with our man, Nguyen Van Thieu, still in power in Saigon.

What Kissinger did not foresee, or did not project in Foreign Affairs, was the cost of meeting some of his aims.

Didn't Tell Us

He did not tell us that we would have to drop another 4 million tons of bombs on Indochina to achieve our negotiating objectives in part. Or spend another 26,000 American lives. Or send another 50,000 soldiers home with serious wounds.

Nor did Kissinger have, or convey, any idea of what it would cost the people of the two Vietnams, Laos and Cambodia to have his minimum negotiating aims reached. He did not tell us that South Vietnam alone would suffer upwards of 80,000 soldiers killed and 240,000 wounded, 150,000 civilians dead and 400,000 wounded, an estimated 1.5 million made homeless.

It is fair to say that Kissinger probably did not envisage costs of that kind when he published his negotiating formula. For he wrote that he did not believe a "prolonged" negotiation was possible. What, then, went wrong, so far as we can identify it, on the American side of the talks? By all appearances, Nixon was still chasing the illusion of victory, whatever Kissinger may have said in Foreign Affairs. It was not prepared to settle for the status quo in South Vietnam, with power divided between Saigon and the National Liberation Front. Only after a time did reason set in.

Cyrus Vance, Paris negotiator in 1968-9, was the first to take up the cease-fire idea. He wrote in 1968 that it was important because it recognized the status quo—and that was necessary for serious peace talks. It was not until October, 1970, that President Nixon made a cease-fire proposal.

More broadly, the Nixon administration attempted for years to do two inconsistent things. It tried to settle with Hanoi by persuading it that the political future in the South would be open. At the same time it was helping to build Thieu into a figure with enormous military and autocratic political power.

After these four years South Vietnam has 1 million men under arms—the equivalent of 12 million in the United States in terms of population. Thieu's police force numbers 118,000; 15,000 or 20,000 of those in the special branch. Thousands of civilians are held in prison without trial, among them some of the independent non-communists with whom Americans would naturally identify.

It is too late to avoid the costs now, or to start negotiating on a different formula. We can only hope that Kissinger and his principals remember what has happened during the last four years as they weigh peace in the balance now.

Viewing Events in Chile

By William F. Buckley Jr.

NEW YORK—A year or so back, Chou En-lai gave an interview to a Mexican publisher and when the subject of Salvador Allende came up, Chou said that although of course he wished Allende well, in fact Allende was not going about the communization of his country in the proper way. Communism cannot be brought in by parliamentary means, said Chou. The suggestion that only coup d'état and totalitarian direction can midwife Communism is historically safe, so far. Allende was going to bring about Communism via a parliamentary democracy. It looks now as though he will fail, and Chou will be vindicated.

The situation is not clear, as Allende globetrotters, but the schedule is definitely off. Allende proposed, on being elected, to carry forward his program by asking parliament for its consent, and by going directly to the people to overrule parliament whenever it proved refractory. As for the opposition, he intended to keep it off balance by balancing the two opposition parties against each other. The opposition press he would neutralize by pitting them against each other. The people would be meanwhile sated by the fruits of expropriation, and by their rapid enrichment as a result of the government control of credit. All of this is shambles.

People Wonder

Now, as Allende declaims before the United Nations about the tyranny of Kennecott Copper and ITT, people are beginning to wonder. The situation in Chile is recently improved—but only because three generals were taken into Allende's cabinet, several of Allende's most provocative proposals were repudiated, and the general feel for the Chilean situation is that the show is very nearly over. Indeed there are those who believe it is altogether possible that Allende will not return. That his great tour will be, in effect, a farewell tour.

"Marxism," an observer on the scene writes, "is, I think, out for the immediate future—at least Marxism of the kind that describes conditions in Moscow, Peking or Cuba. Socialism—a very deep socialism—will be hard to eradicate, and hardships of every kind lie in store for us. But I think history will record that Allende fell on the first of November."

Allende had no—alternative than to give the impression that it was his idea, in the first place to bring in the generals. The Communists and the Socialists united to oppose this, and the Socialists threatened to withdraw their support. Allende told them: "Okay, but the moment you withdraw your support, every Socialist I have appointed to office will lose his job." The Socialists didn't want to make that important a contribution to national unemployment, and gave in. The Communists did too. My opinion is that Pinochet is now in charge.

What will Pinochet do? The speculation is that he will proceed with reference to what the people say in the elections next March, which he will interpret as a referendum. If they vote the Allende line, Pinochet will permit a continuation of socialization, but done in a less hectic way. If they vote against Allende, as is expected, Pinochet will probably force the resignation of Allende, and that will be that.

The election is quite crucial, as the Allendites hope and pray that the opposition will once again divide, so as to obscure the results. It may very well be the last opportunity given to Chile to renounce Allende and his works. This is because the opposition, though popular, has increasing difficulty in making its voice heard. In fact the press is still technically free. Only two radio stations have actually been nationalized more or less completely. The state TV channel is of course obsequious to Allende, and the Chilean university channel has always been Marxist. But Channel 13, formerly left-wing, is now definitely in opposition. But it needs desperately simple transmitting parts, and the state agency refuses to make these available. The opposition newspaper faces terrible paper shortages. They have enough to go around until March, but do not know where they will go after that for paper.

Now Is the Time

Reforming Congress

By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON—It seemed historically right, somehow, that the most cogent statement at last week's hearings on congressional reform should come from Sen. Robert Taft Jr., R. Ohio, the son of the man who, in the last generation, best represented Republican party responsibility and Senate institutional pride.

The three days of hearings arranged by Sen. Adlai E. Stevenson III, D. Ill., and Charles Mathias Jr., R. Md., were designed to spur public interest in reforming Congress from what Mathias called its status as a "third-rate, fourth-class power."

Worthy as the enterprise was, there was an air of futility to much of the testimony. Legislators and citizens suggested everything from better furniture to more rational work schedules to an age limit on congressional service. But it remained for Taft to cut through the fog of "would it be nice if . . ." talk to the political realities of Congress' situation.

Blunt Appraisal

He began with a blunt appraisal of the meaning of the last election, saying it was a "vote of confidence" in the presidency and a "vote no confidence" in the legislative branch.

While the incumbent President was bracing to re-election, "the defeat of congressional incumbents in both primary and general elections was heavy," Taft said.

Where congressional incumbents did win, he said they got it on their reputations as caretakers of their constituents' interests in Washington, not as important parts of an effective policy-making body, as intended by the Constitution.

There may be a few worthy exceptions, but Taft was surely right in arguing that so long as elections are won this way, "there is bound to be an increasing tendency on the part of legislators to be more parochial and individualistic in their decisions" and a decreasing willingness to seek "legislative compromise and a party position or party unity."

Unless that tendency is reversed, the power of Congress as an institution is certain to decline, whatever fluctuations take place in the influence of individual members. The reason is, as Taft said, that "we need centralized and identifiable party and legislative responsibility if the Congress budget is to be a law worthy of exceptions."

Taft's great service has been to point the congressional reformers toward the key to restoring the legislative branch's constitutional role. It is a service worthy of his name.

Set the Stage

If the Democratic and Republican policy committees in House and Senate had adequate staff and resources, they could provide the material for an intelligent and effective session in each party's caucus of year's separate legislative and appropriations actions. This, in turn, could set the stage for open debates and votes in both houses on the congressional budget for the coming year.

Taft's great service has been to point the congressional reformers toward the key to restoring the legislative branch's constitutional role. It is a service worthy of his name.

Kissinger Hailed

May I congratulate you on the articles by Anthony Lewis and James Reston (IHT, Dec. 2-3) on Dr. Kissinger. While both are of high quality and truly analytical, they seem to me to miss one very important point. Namely, that Dr. Kissinger is the only man who has brought about the end of the cold war, a political curse dominating civilized man for over two decades. Instead of barking at each other, America and Russia are now talking in a recognizable human voice due to the efforts of this once Harvard professor. President Nixon has done nothing more than discover Dr. Kissinger and shown the wisdom of using his talents in the right direction. He would deserve to be called the greatest President since Washington.

What political journalist or historian, for that matter, can miss the point that it was Dr. Kissinger as the messenger of peace who, in a matter of months, perhaps of days, achieved what for million tons of American bombs failed to attain in seven years of war. His next mission, in my opinion, should be an attempt to negotiate peace in the Middle East.

There is an ancient Talmud saying that anyone who can save a single human life is as if he had created a whole world. Any reward is planned for Dr. Kissinger, as it should be. I would vote that he be given the Nobel Prize for Peace.

Hurray for Ronald Gary Glass, Mrs. D., a writer I have admired since the "good old days" when he was French Consul in Los Angeles. He has put his finger on the main weakness of America today—a strong tendency toward masochism. Instead of being proud of being American, most Americans are almost apologetic and allow themselves to be treated with disdain. Not I.

Let's hope his letter sets a good trend toward more kind treatment of a great country.

In 1962, Mr. Maltz went on to say, he had received a written report from the Soviet Writers' Union, stating that in the years from 1945 to 1959, more than 2 million copies of his stories and novels had been published in nine languages in the Soviet Union.

"I have no knowledge of what publication has occurred in the years since," he wrote. "However, it is a fair presumption that the royalties due me in rubles would be considerable. I hereby officially transfer them as a bequest to Alexander I. Solzhenitsyn for his personal use, and, if he so chooses, for financial aid to other Soviet writers also suffering blacklisting by having been expelled from the Writers' Union."

In the letter, which was notarized Dec. 4 although dated Dec. 5, the American writer urged other authors whose works had been published in the Soviet Union to do the same.

Reached by telephone in Los Angeles, Mr. Maltz said yesterday that most of his works, including four novels—"The Cross and The Arrow," "The Underground Stream," "A Long Day in a Short Life" and "The Journey of Simon Mokevich"—had been published in the Soviet Union.

He estimated that, as of 1962, he should be owed $1,300 rubles. Noting that several reports had indicated that Mr. Solzhenitsyn had earned 111 rubles a month as a secondary school teacher of physics, he said that his gift "would be enough to feed Solzhenitsyn and his family for a long time."

During the thirties and forties, Mr. Maltz was one of Hollywood's best known screenwriters. His screen credits include "This Gun for Hire," "Pride of the Marines," "Naked City" and "Destination Tokyo." After being named with a number of other Hollywood notables in 1947 as a Communist, he appeared before the House Committee on Un-American Activities and declined to answer questions about his Communist party affiliation. Fined $1,000 and sentenced to a year in federal prison in 1950, he was blacklisted from writing for films from 1947 to 1964.

An exhibition of Dutch painting, sponsored jointly by museums in Lille, Arras and Dunkirk, France, is currently on view in Lille. The exhibition will be on view in Lille until Dec. 31. From there, it moves to Arras (January and February), and Dunkirk (March 15 to April 30). The joint venture, drawing on the collections of the three museums, includes works illustrative of late 16th-century mannerism through the naturalism of the 18th century.

Opera in Vienna

By David Stevens

VIENNA, Dec. 11 (UPI).—A new era has begun at the Vienna State Opera, part of the game of musical chairs that has involved the directorial thrones of almost every major opera house in the West. But here, at least, it seems to be in some respects that the more things change the more they stay the same.

The new man in charge here is Rudolf Gamsjäger, for many years concert director of the Musikverein, and a large part of his first three months in office seems to have been taken up with a running battle with the hardcore opera audience—the standees and, to a lesser extent, some sitzies as well.

The battle was joined at the beginning of the season when Helga Dernesch was treated roughly by the standees after a performance of "Fidelio." The riposte was a ban on solo curtain calls, which effectively prevents protesters from singling out the objects of their disaffection. The ban has been somewhat softened, at least to the point of allowing solo curtain calls when no bows and whistles are expected. But the struggle has continued with negative reactions to some aspects of the season's two new productions that Daland needs. Suttnar, an Austrian now with the East Berlin Staatsoper, too often substituted mere loudness for excitement.

Cochran singing Erik, his first role in a Staatsoper premiere and a conductor, Ormar Suttnar, making his debut in the house on the Ringstrasse.

The first performance, it seems, was not a happy occasion, but the third, on Saturday, was received well enough. Indeed, it was not a bad performance at all, but decidedly pale by comparison with past standards here.

For Janis Martin, an American who has been rapidly establishing herself in a wide soprano repertory in Europe, it was a triumph. She sang with brilliance and absolute security (with slight exception made for her two top notes in the final act) and acted with desperate fervor. MacNeil sang well, except for some unsteady moments, but his characterization of the accused seaman had little flavor. Both singers took solo bows and collected bravos.

Cochran was a solid, but uninteresting Erik, while Manfred Schemer, despite a pleasant bass voice, had none of the dark tone or rough old sea-dog character that Daland needs. Suttnar, an Austrian now with the East Berlin Staatsoper, too often substituted mere loudness for excitement.

But music can trivialize as well as intensify, and that is what has happened here. Jürgens seems to have taken every Viennese operetta ever written as a model, and Rolf Kotschera's staging, Todd Bolender's dances and Gerhard Bruby's sets, while polished, no more represent a modern musical than would a good revival of "The Chocolate Soldier."

Michael Helian, a Burgtheater actor, pretty well stole the show as Blumenschl, with a charming nonchalant manner and a thick Swiss-German accent, while among the other performers, Gabriele Jacoby was a standard operetta ingenue as Raina and Ingmar Seefried, seemingly launched on a new career, mugged flagrantly and sang very little.

3-Dimensional Boat

Günther Schneider-Siemssen's sets were a fine example of his ability to employ reality without making it look odd. Daland's boat was there in three-dimensional fact, with hull, deck, rigging and sail, while the Dutchman's ghostly vessel with red sails zoomed in on projections and, at the end, evaporated in the mist, leaving a clear blue hole in the Northern sky for an apotheosis.

Wolfgang Zöhrer's staging was more effectively animated for the chorus, which was in good form under Norbert Balatich's preparation, than for the individual characters.

One of the major events of the Vienna season, at least one of the most publicized, has been "Helden, Helden" (Heroes, Heroes), a new musical based on George Bernard Shaw's "Arms and the Man," with music by Udo Jürgens, the Austrian star pop singer and composer, and with text, lyrics, musical arrangements and dances by a multinational gang of people.

The program is full of statements that attest to the ambition of the project—that the music offers the possibility of "intensifying Shaw's views," that it emphasizes.

Tess Amrouche will give five recitals of Barber and Spanish songs from Dec. 12 through 16 at 6:30 p.m. at the Théâtre de la Ville in Paris, where she first appeared during last season. She will be accompanied by the guitarist Rafael Heredia.

"La Sylphide" had its first performance by the ballet of the Zurich Opera Saturday with Hans Brönner responsible for reconstructing the Bouronville choreography and with sets and costumes by Søren Frandsen. Gaye Fulton danced the title part and Julio Malval conducted.

On the same program, "Patchwork," an experimental ballet on which Michel Descombes and four orchestral musicians have collaborated, was performed. The work, for dancers, percussion and bass, involves the four instrumentalists and three solo dancers, offering improvisational opportunities to the performers.

Four performances of two different programs by the ballet of the Monte Carlo Opera will be given Dec. 26-Jan. 1 under the title "Homage to Diaghilev." Among the dancers scheduled to appear are Marcia Haydée and Richard Cragun of the Stuttgart Ballet, Rudolf Nureyev and Eva Evdokimova. André Preller will conduct.

as her imperious Mama. Taken as mindless entertainment, it was fun, and last night's performance (the show has been running six weeks) had a full and appreciative house. ■ ■ ■

Unlike orchestras devoted exclusively to concert work, the Vienna Philharmonic has daily duties at the opera and gives relatively few concerts a season—all of them major events. Yesterday morning, Lorin Maazel was the conductor and the Philharmonic responded to his fervent urging with some glorious playing in the orchestral excerpts from Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet" and in Strauss's "Ein Heldenleben."

The Berlin is a rare item in Viennese concert halls, and the orchestra played it with much attention to detail and rich orchestral coloring—although the hues were perhaps somewhat subdued by comparison with what a good French orchestra would have produced. With the Strauss, this orchestra is entirely at home, so much so that it must be a formidable undertaking for a guest conductor. Still, the orchestra was attentive to Maazel in a beautifully balanced, musical and unabashed performance, with Gerhart Hertzl pouring cut rich tone in the solo violin part.

New U.S. Trade Bill Aids Import Protection

By Edwin L. Dale Jr.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11 (NYT)—A new kind of trade legislation, including a system of safeguards for industries and workers damaged by steeply rising imports, has strong backing within the administration.

The legislation, proposed for submission to Congress early next year, would contain the traditional authority for reducing tariffs, to enable trade negotiations with other countries to begin late next year. But the scope of the bill would be far broader.

A tentative title for the bill is the Trade Reform Act. This would emphasize its difference from the straightforward tariff-cutting legislation of the past like the Trade Expansion Act of 1962, the last major trade bill passed by Congress.

President Nixon has yet to make a decision on both the nature of trade legislation to be presented and the important practical issue of when to present it. Those backing the Trade Reform Act believe the best strategy would be to ask for congressional consideration—starting in the House Ways and Means Committee—as soon as possible in the new session.

As envisaged by its backers, the new bill would have three broad sections.

Complete Revamp

The first would completely revamp the present cumbersome system of "safeguards" for industries and workers that are harmed by large and rapid increases in imports. While details are not known, the new safeguard system would probably include much more rapid action in cases where temporary restriction of imports is deemed necessary, and would also greatly improve the present system of "adjustment assistance" for workers and companies harmed by imports.

Support for Curbs

The Japanese acknowledge that most other advanced nations are likely to support U.S. calls for broader controls on international trade in fibers and fabrics.

This autumn, for instance, officials of the Common Market commission said the EEC would like to conclude an overall accord with Japan, South Korea, Taiwan and Hong Kong governing imports of textiles from those areas.

FINANCIAL NEWS AND NOTES

Chrysler Plan Japan Bonds

Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. are planning to bonds in Japan worth $60 million and $100 million, respectively. Ford's will be a bond carrying a coupon of 4.75 percent, conversion price about 10.5 percent above its price on the New York Stock Exchange, eve of signature of a formal agreement with Japanese underwriters. The bond will have a 15-year maturity and is expected to be issued in 1973.

Chrysler's will be a straight, 15-year issue coupon of 7.75 percent. It is expected to be issued at 5.75 percent. Chrysler's bond is backed with seven trust funds.

To Buy 17 Eso Motels

Charrington is to buy 17 Eso motor hotels in France, the Netherlands, Belgium and about 25 million, and will lease and further nine Eso hotels in Germany to Eso, the European operation of Corp., says the sale reflects the need to trade capital and management resources oil and chemical activities to meet growing demands. The two groups will cooperate in the hotel chain and Bass will continue to use the Eso name for the motels.

Profit Push Loses Ground

Telefunken's profit improvement evident first half of this year has lost headway, chairman Hans Grobe says. He de to say how this year's net earnings might compare with last year's 75 million deutsche mark from 105 million DM in 1970, or dividend the company intends to pay after cutting its pay-out for last year to 10 percent from 16 percent. Operating results this year will be significantly better in most sectors, he says, but this did not account for losses from AEG's reorganized nuclear and computer activities. These are now grouped in cooperative undertakings with Siemens AG and Nixdorf Computer GmbH.

GM Seeks New Price Increase

General Motors has asked the Price Commission for permission to boost prices 3 percent on its 1973 model cars, trucks and options. GM also filed for increases averaging 3.45 percent on its nonautomotive and other products based upon what it termed allowable cost increases on these products. GM raised prices last week an average of $64 on 1973 cars, to cover the cost of emission control devices, new bumpers and other safety devices. GM says the new request is based on allowable cost increases incurred since December of last year.

Ford Predicts Higher Sales

Ford Motor Co. predicted continued growth in car and truck sales next year in the United States and abroad. Henry Ford, chairman, and Lee A. Iacocca, president, say in their year-end statement there is no sign of a slowing in U.S. economic recovery or the record pace of car and truck sales. "We are forecasting that real gross national product will show a healthy gain of about 6 percent next year," they say. "We see no reason why car sales should not be 11 million or better next year." The Ford executives add that U.S. car sales this year will be about 10.8 million, a 6 percent increase from last year.

Payments Deficit Worsens in Italy In Latest Month

ROME, Dec. 11 (AP-DJ)—Italy's balance of payments worsened again in October, totaling a deficit of 177 billion lire compared with 167.4 billion lire in September, the Bank of Italy announced today. The deficit in October 1971 was 27 billion lire.

The bank said the rising volume and cost of imports was mainly responsible for the worsening deficit.

On the basis of preliminary figures, Italy's net official reserves at Oct. 31 stood at $3,614.7 billion lire, down from $3,672.9 billion at Sept. 30. In year-earlier comparisons were immediately affected due to the change in valuation of certain reserves following devaluation of the dollar last December.

Of the net reserves, convertible currencies accounted for 1,411.8 billion lire, down from 1,478.3 billion lire at end-September. In recent months there have been several lira-devaluation strokes, and Milan foreign exchange dealers said Banca d'Italia spent reserves, mostly dollars, to support the lira.

Big Demand Heats U.S. Economy

NEW YORK, Dec. 11 (AP-DJ)—The massive buying power of the American public seems certain to swamp retailers this month as people go on an unprecedented Christmas buying spree. And this at a time when a majority of plants are running at 90 percent capacity and when the list of production materials is short supply is steadily growing. No one can say whether these facts point to an overheating economy, but the question is worth consideration.

The mild recession of recent years chilled spending enthusiasm as the public went into a phase of saving. Now the urge to spend is rampant. Retail sales are rapidly approaching the level of $40 billion a month—compared with a monthly average of $20.5 billion in 1963.

Inflation Factor Discounted

Nor is this "largely a matter of inflation"—a popular, but inaccurate, explanation. The retail price level of all merchandise sold in stores has risen only 30 percent since 1963—only a third as much as the 90 percent gain in dollar volume of sales.

The prime fuel for this fire has been the huge gain in personal income, which now approaches an astronomical $1,000 billion a year, the Commerce Department reports—about double that of 1963.

Nor is population growth an appreciable factor, since it has grown only about 10 percent since 1963.

The fattening of individual paychecks, large as it has been, does not tell the whole story. Multiple paychecks within individual families are highly important. The number of adult women at work has jumped about 10 million (some 50 percent) since the late 1950s. That compares with a man-at-work growth of only about 15 percent.

Tariff Cut

The second section of the bill would provide the new tariff-cutting authority with the maximum permissible percentage reduction—in exchange for foreign concessions yet to be decided upon. The United States has indicated an interest in an eventual world-wide move to zero tariffs on industrial goods, but this idea has met a cool reception so far from the Common Market.

However, the Europeans have insisted that the U.S. negotiating team have some tariff reduction authority in advance of the trade negotiations, rather than ask for congressional approval after the negotiations.

The third part of the bill would be a catch-all. It could include such items as the following:

• Granting of lower, "most favored nation" tariffs on goods from the Soviet Union, as recently agreed in trade negotiations between the United States and Soviet Union, and probably authority for the President to do the same thing for other Communist countries.

• Repeal of the especially protective "America Selling Price" system of assessing duties on certain chemicals—a repeat first asked of Congress as long ago as 1968.

• Possible technical revisions of the long-standing "anti-dumping" and "countervailing duty" laws. These are designed to protect against "unfair" exporting practices by other countries, such as selling at a lower price in the U.S. market than in the home market.

The figure is $500 million more than estimated during the summit talks in Honolulu between President Nixon and Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka last summer.

EEC Bankers Propose End To Gold Payments System

BASEL, Dec. 11 (Reuters)—Common Market central bank governors today agreed to propose a relaxation in the European monetary code, suspending the rule that official debts within the community should be paid partly in gold, according to a usually reliable monetary source here.

The amendment will provide a more flexible environment for British entry into the community's monetary scheme when the pound is given a fixed exchange rate.

It will extend to all nine members of the enlarged European Economic Community a special exemption from gold payments enjoyed by Italy since the pound was floated last June. The Italian exemption was due to expire on Dec. 31.

Under the present EEC scheme, members must finance the reserve cost of maintaining their exchange rates within the narrow margins of the community by paying out gold, special drawing rights and currency in proportion to their official holdings of these assets.

The central bankers also agreed that continuing tight money policies to stifle inflation should be harmonized to avoid disruptive flows of funds across national boundaries.

Any further increase in European interest rates should be engineered without triggering an inflow of funds from the United States or from the vast Euro-dollar pool of expatriate American currency, the bankers agreed.

One problem of relying on tight credit to contain inflation is that it forces interest rates higher, thus attracting deposits from abroad which could swamp national money supplies and inspire fresh demand pressures.

Particular emphasis was laid in the talks here on the West German central bank's cash deposit scheme to discourage banks from raising their prime rate above 6 percent.

Because the Fed has imposed regulations to discourage heavy borrowing of Eurodollars by U.S. banks, any major return flow next year may be through other channels, Mr. Hill noted.

While the Eurodollar pool has grown greatly in the last few years, the borrowings of such funds by U.S. banks from their foreign subsidiaries has dwindled to a token $1 billion or so from as much as $3 billion in 1969. Authorities have estimated the Eurodollar market at upwards of $50 billion.

Prices were slightly lower in moderate trading on the American Stock Exchange. The Amex index dipped 0.01 to 26.77, while declines topped advances, 338 against 416. Turnover was 3,81 million shares, compared with 4,68 million on Friday.

Mountain Fuel Supply, a natural gas distributor that has achieved glamour status this year, gained 6 to 83.33 after trading at a record price of $4.14—14 which is 53 points above its 1972 low of 1.14. A Wyoming oil and gas discovery well, in which Mountain Fuel owns a 42.25 percent interest, has triggered trading interest in this stock. Union Pacific, which holds a similar interest in the well, rose 1.14 to 63.

London, Dec. 11 (AP-DJ)—Tightening European currency controls could keep U.S. short-term interest rates from rising in 1973, an American banker suggests.

"I'm changing my opinion" from the general view that U.S. rates will rise next year as the economic advance continues, Richard D. Hill, chairman of First National Bank of Boston, said in an interview. The bank, which had deposits last year-end of about $4 billion, is controlled by First National Boston Corp.

While the supply of dollars on deposit in banks abroad is still growing, there are "fewer places where it can go," Mr. Hill said, citing the tighter restrictions on borrowing of Eurodollars being imposed by such key continental countries as West Germany, France and Switzerland.

Because Eurodollar interest rates could be "quite low" early next year once year-end "window-dressing" activity is over, more Eurodollars "could well come into the United States," he said that this would add to the supply of lendable funds in the United States and so help keep supply and demand for credit in balance.

Stability Possible

"This makes me wonder a little bit about the possibility of increasing short-term rates" in the United States, Mr. Hill said. The general level of such U.S. rates could be fairly stable in the first half of 1973 and could even decline in the second half, he added.

Among other things, "this may resolve the 6 percent problem," he said in reference to the reported efforts of the Federal Reserve Board and the Nixon administration.

HERMETIC DEFINITION

By H.D. New Directions, 117 pp. Cloth, $8.75. Paper

Reviewed by Hugh Kenner

A voice from the past, a ghost in fact, still defining itself. She cut her name down to two letters long ago, 60 years ago now; and her sense of herself became a few limped postures, the querter on the shore, the supplicant, the weaver of spells. To be so much less was still to be more than Hilka Doolittle from Bethlehem, Pa., daughter to the professor of astronomy at the state university, baptised Maraviah, amateur of Greek. In her seventies she was yearning to be more still to be whole. She invokes Ida/Iris: because you do not drink our wine, nor sell our salt, nor would enter your senses through burnt resin and pinecones smouldering in a flat dish...

A ghost, invoking a goddess who is herself dispersed among names.

The poems in this new book date from circa 1960, when she was 54. She had been inserted into literary history at 26, when Ezra Pound invented "Imagism" to supply a context for five poems of hers. A normal context would have been a book of poems, but Pound sensed that a book's worth would be a long time getting written. He had didactic uses for a "movement" anyhow, and "Hermes of the Ways," "Orchard," a few others might as well exemplify it as wait for an oeuvre.

Unhappily the invented movement that was meant to float her reputation encapsulated it, and though she lived many more decades and extended her self-definition through many volumes, she has remained totally identified with the very little she had done when she was first heard of. It is as though five of the shortest pieces in "Harmomium" were to stand for the life's work of Wallace Stevens.

Her psychic life was contorted. Freud himself analyzed her, and she lived her last years at Kliniknacht on Lake Zurich under care that was partly psychiatric, partly directed toward the corporeal needs of an old woman who had broken her hip and walked only with difficulty. She kept resin and pine-cone burning in her room, and pondered books of hermetic symbolism. "Women," she thought, "are individually seeking, as one woman, fragments of the Eternal Lover. As the Eternal Lover has been scattered and dissociated, so she in her search for him." That was partly myth, partly the way it felt to be herself.

Any man who came near might be a shard of the Eternal Lover. The first section of "Hermetic Definition" addresses a corner who is partly angel, partly several remembered men, partly the head of the Paris Bureau of Newsweek, who catalyzed the poem by stopping by for an interview. (A god would interrogate you.) His eyes compelled her, and he took her mind to Paris, where the statues

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott

East had a slight urge to double four spades, but wisely resisted the temptation. West led the club king, and followed with the ace. He then shifted to the heart six.

South had worked his strategy out well up to a point. He saw that in the rather unlikely event that East held the diamond king, he would have to hope for a two-spade division. But if the diamond finesse worked, as expected, he could afford a safety play to guard against East holding four trumps—not unlikely, since West had implied shortness in spades.

South therefore won the third tick in his hand with the heart king and ran the diamond nine to find out who held the king. The nine won the trick marking West with the king, and now South attempted the safety play. He led the spade seven, with a successful result: West discarded, revealing the situation, and South had no difficulty in entering dummy twice to trap East's remaining trumps.

In fact, South ran a con-admirable risk of failing in an easy contract. It was far from unlikely that West held four diamonds as part of his take-out double, so one diamond lead followed by the surrender of a spade trick could have been fatal: West might have been able to win and give his partner a diamond ruff to set the contract.

South was trying to allow for a virtually impossible situation. East had played high-low in clubs, showing the queen; and the shift by West to a low heart made it clear that East held the queen or jack. So West held nine high-card points at most in hearts and clubs, and needed the diamond king to justify his vulnerability take-out double. Without that card, he could have at most 12 points, including three "bad" points in spades.

So South should have assumed that the diamond king was on his left, and won the second trick in dummy. He should then have led the spade ten, and run it if East had been smart enough to play low. This would have guarded against the 4-division; produced an overtrick if West held a singleton spade nine; and given East a chance to make the mistake of covering with Q-9-2 or J-9-2.

Bradshaw Hurt as Oilers Bow

Steelers Gain Their 1st Playoffs

Thomas Rogers

ON, Dec. 11 (UPI)—Pittsburgh Steelers clinched its Football League play-off for the first time with victory yesterday over the Oilers. The Steelers, with 11 against three defeats, one-game advantage in their Conference Central Division over the Cleveland Browns. Pittsburgh's final game is at San Diego while the Browns oppose the Jets in New York.

Although the Steelers have not clinched the division crown, should next week's result cause them to finish second to the Browns, they would qualify for the American Conference's wild-card playoff berth.

Terry Bradshaw, the quarterback, suffered a dislocation of the third finger on his throwing hand in the second quarter. The score then was 3-3 as Houston had scored on a 34-yard field goal by Skip Butler. Joe Gilliam, a rookie from Tennessee State, who had played only seven minutes all season, replaced Bradshaw. Franco Harris of the Steelers, a rookie running back, gained 61 yards in 21 carries, ending his streak of 100-yard games at six, but putting him over the 1,000-yard mark for the season.

Yesterday because the Los Angeles Rams were upset by the St. Louis Cardinals, 24-14. But instead the Falcons slipped into second place behind San Francisco, with Los Angeles third.

As a result, the division lead changed hands for the fourth consecutive week, and the championship will be decided in the last round of regular-season games next weekend. Atlanta could have won it outright yesterday because the Los Angeles Rams were upset by the St. Louis Cardinals, 24-14. But instead the Falcons slipped into second place behind San Francisco, with Los Angeles third.

None of the three contenders can slip into the playoffs through the back door as the wild-card qualifier, with the best record in the conference. That berth has already been clinched by the Dallas Cowboys.

In the first half alone, the Falcons committed twice a damaging interference penalty, missed a field goal at point-blank range and then had another blocked.

Incredibly, the Falcons averaged more than 8 yards a carry in the first half, but could produce no points. And second-guessers were accusing coach Norm van Brocklin of a blunder at perhaps the game's pivotal point in the fourth quarter.

With more than 13 minutes to play and the 49ers holding a 6-0 lead, Van Brocklin decided to go for a first down rather than a field goal on fourth-and-3 from the San Francisco 5-yard line.

"No comment," Gaherin said.

"I'm not asking for any comment," Miller said.

"It was an act that only a rank amateur would perform," Miller said last week about Kuhn's taking the owners' case to the public. In labor relations Miller is a professional.

Before the owners went to Hawaii they had received a complete set of counter proposals from the players, which they haven't answered yet. The players' suggestion for relaxing the reserve system is similar to the owners', but it differs in detail. For example, they would make a player a free agent after five years in baseball, three of them in the majors, if his salary was below the average.

In Other Words'

"In other words," a man said to Miller, "they're saying the reserve system is all right if the player is well paid. I think that if ownership of people is immoral, it is immoral at any price."

"It is," Miller said, "but in bargaining you must make concessions. We are trying to make a start on a three-year experimental period during which we can examine our experiences. One of the players' proposals is that at the end of seven years in the majors, again after 12 years and again after 17, a player may, if he chooses, become a free agent no matter how much he is paid."

"At some time in his life, a man ought to have the right to change his job if he wants to. A player can be unhappy for reasons other than money."

"His owner might address him as 'boy,'" Miller said.

"Exactly," Miller said.

A Condition

The conditions Kuhn mentioned was the owners' at that the $30,000 be preserved for 10 years from now, could be the minimum the players.

Sense to a question in Kuhn said the players' avives had been notified to disclose the offer.

This was true, as the chronology shows: the first negotiating last September, both agreed not to argue in public, contracts all matters involved in bargaining, including non-plan, expire this.

While their employers Hawaii, the 24 players avives were meeting in amas. They had concerns and Miller had an confidential interview to when he received a nonoffer.
